

Computing Your Business

A Sydney-based computer software company has programs available for road transport operators. They have been devised after consultation with owner drivers, transport operations personnel and transport accountants.

A typical small fleet or single truck computer package costs less than some paint and chrome jobs seen on the roads, according to the Transoft Corporation, based at Sydney's Flemington Markets. The company offers full administration facilities to show exactly how your business is travelling.

The Transoft proof of delivery system, the only one of its type sold and installed in Australia, gives full details on every consignment, how much you are making, how much you owe, who hasn't paid and help with trip planning.

The computer will keep a complete file on all transactions, calculate driver payments, withhold deductions and print deduction forms. It will even print nice or nasty reminders on statements for late payers.
